What Really Happened™ (WRH) — Survival Map & Trajectory Engine

THE SURVIVAL MAP — WHERE PATTERNS COME FROM

The Survival Map is WRH's five-part trauma-literacy model. It explains where patterns came from before asking anyone to change them. It does not require disclosure, diagnosis, or clinical processing.

Core principle: People cannot interrupt a pattern they have never been taught to see. The Survival Map makes the pattern visible — without blame, disclosure, or clinical framing.

THE TRAJECTORY ENGINE — HOW DIRECTION CHANGES

The Trajectory Engine is WRH's directional-change model. It explains how a person moves from automatic survival pattern to repeated, measurable change — not through willpower or punishment, but through repeated interrupts that build evidence.

Core principle: One interrupt does not change a trajectory — repetition does. The nervous system updates through repeated evidence that a new direction is possible. WRH tracks direction, not compliance.

HOW THE TWO MODELS CONNECT

Survival Map	Answers: Where did this pattern come from?
Trajectory Engine	Answers: How does direction change?
Together	Give staff and participants a shared language for understanding patterns and supporting measurable directional change — without therapy, diagnosis, or disclosure.
